Colorado Breast Reconstruction Surgeon Becomes A Welcome Friend For Many Cancer Patients On The Road To Recovery

Denver, CO (PRWEB) July 25, 2006 – As Colorado continues to be a strong leader in the states actively promoting events to provide funding for breast cancer research, one doctor in Colorado charges forward in reaching out to those who have already been given the news that they have breast cancer.

Dr. Jeremy Z. Williams, M.D., is leading the way by offering breast reconstruction options to those already affected with breast cancer. Dr. Williams completed seven years of extensive training at John Hopkins Hospital, and is trained in some of the most advanced options available to survivors.

“Breast reconstruction exemplifies the heart of plastic surgery with the ability to restore both form and function” states Dr. Williams. “One woman will be diagnosed with breast cancer every 2 ½ minutes. Everyone is touched by the impact of breast cancer.”

Breast reconstruction is one of the most rewarding surgical procedures available today. New medical techniques have made it possible to create a breast that can come close in form and appearance to a natural breast. Frequently, breast reconstruction is possible immediately following removal, so the patient wakes up having been spared the experience of seeing herself with no breast at all.

“I have had the privilege of being trained in some of the most sophisticated procedures that allow restoration of the breast with the patient’s own tissue” states Dr. Williams. “These recent surgical advances not only permit restoration of the body, but also a sense of wholeness.”
